A TERRIBLE DEATH.

he Italian Devoured by a Monster Grizzly Near Lake Takee-Was it Old Bringsungan II . 6 3

Last Sunday morning two men started ont from McKinney's, Lake Tahoe, to look for Luigi Barmetto, an Italian sheep herder who had been missing two days. The Virginia Chronicle has this thrilling secount of the discovery they made: After about two hours' search, Mars'on shouted to his companion, who scrambled across the ravine and turried in the direction of the sound. In a small opening, not far from a huge pile of rocks, Martin was standing almost unnerved by terror, pale and trembling. A few bones, shreds of clothing, a large tuft of curly black hair and a shoe were scattered about the ground, ghastly evidences of the horrible fate that had overtaken the unfortunate Italian. The manner in which he met his death was plain; at one side of the opening there was a tree about the size of a man's leg, the bark of which was torn to shreds at least eight feet from the ground, one of the lower limbs being ripped off also. The ground about the oots was loose, showing that some animal of tremendous strength had shaken the tree and bent it over. What this animal had been was only too plainly indicated by the enormous footprints near the tree and in two or three soft spotenf ground in the opening. The Italian had undoubtedly encountered a large grizz y and

CLIMBED THE TREE to escape the monster, The chambers of his pistol, which was found by Wardrup about ten feet from the tree, were empty, showing that he had defended himself as well as he could, or perhaps he considered himself safe in the tree, and had enraged the bear by firing at him. The latter supposition seems the more probable. Whatever the cause of the animal's rage, he had grasped the tree in his giant arms and shaken it with such fury as to throw the Italian to the ground, where the in uristed, and perhaps famished monster, made short and bloody work of the poor fellow. Wardrup as erts that the tracks of the bear were the largest that he had ever seen, and that two outside toes from one foot were missing. When the two men di-covered this, it occurred to them that Old Brin might be in the vicinity, and knowing, from many tales, the ferocity of this gigantic bear, they made the best speed possible out of the woods, taking with them the tuft of early air as a memento of the horrible fate of Laivi Barmetto. "OLD BRIN" AGAIN HEARD FROM. Wardrup's be'ief that Old Brin was the particular bear is perhaps correct, as the following communication to the Carson Appeal indicates that the bear the extent of $10,000.

SMALL'S STATION, Aug. 1, 1880. I see by the Reno GAZETTE that Old Brin, the biggest grizzly bear that ever roamed the woods, is dead. Now I know better, becau-e last winter I took a shot at him about three miles above Cascule lake. I only fired one shot, and as he turned I lit out, not earing for's row with him. I know it was Old Brin, because his track show ed that two outside toes were gone, h having been caught in a trap in 1862. I havn't seen him since, and to be plain I don't want to. Yours Truly,

JOHN HEMWAY.

Cole's Circus Advertising Car.

The advertising car of Cole's circus arrived from the East last night and went to Carson this morning. The car is handsomely paint d and provided with ladders, paste cans, brushes and every convenience for bill-stick ing. An immense stock of posters and small bills is carried in the car Eighteen men travel in it, whose busiess is to put up the bill and poster to be held. Reno has been thoroubly billed to day, and the small boy delights togoze in open-mouthed wonder at the morelous productions of the advertiser's are.
